

Mrs. Frances Stafford, of 243 E. 114th St., N.Y. City, adds her testimony to the hundreds of thousands on Mrs. Pinkham's files.

When Lydia E. Pinkham's Remedies were first introduced skeptics all over the country frowned upon their curative claims, but as year after year has rolled by and the little group of women who had been cured by the new discovery has since grown into a vast army of hundreds of thousands, doubts and skepticisms have been swept away as by a mighty flood, until to-day the great good that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her other medicines are doing among the women of America is attracting the attention of many of our leading scientists, physicians and thinking people.

Merit alone could win such fame; wise, therefore, is the woman who for a cure relies upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

shortly after. Deputy Coroner George W. Brichier held an inquest, the jury returning a verdict of accidental death.

Fred LePage and Conrad Beleriein, with some other boys, who live at Prairie du Pont, were wading. The boys could not swim and they bantered one another to see how far out in the lake they dared go. Both went until only their mouths were above water. Suddenly Belerlein sank from view.

At first the boys thought he was fooling them, but as he did not reappear, LePage started after him. As he got near to where Belerlein sank, he called to the other boys not to follow, because he felt quick-sand. Then one of Belerlein's arms was seen and LePage went after his companion. LePage was seen to grab the arm and then he sank below the water. The small boys on the shore called for help, Several farmers heard them and rushed to their assistance.

That large sleeves will be fashionable this coming winter seems to be a well-estab-ished fact, for on all of the new models as ever, if not more so.

The leg-of-mutton shape, although no known by that name, is quite the most popular for the moment in the cloth cos tumes that are made with fancy coats begins to get large above the elbow, while just below the elbow it is exaggerated in size, finally tapering into a cuff or band at

There are many variations in this style; sometimes the sleeve is slashed from the wrist to above the elbow, and then is seen puff of different material or color or of white, or there is only a narrow opening through which is visible a plaited under sleeve, the outer one being held togethe tons fastening it to the undersleeve. Always a graceful and becoming design is the sleeve of medium size, but larger below the elbow and finished with deep lace cuff, or, as is popular now, with a narrow cuff of embroidered velvet finished with a ruffle of lace that falls over the hand. Another favorite style is the bishop sleeve with the top of lace and also a lace cuff so long that it reaches from elbow to wrist, so long that it reaches from elbow to wrist, while the fullness of the upper part of the sleeve falls over the cuff.

The sleeve of medium size with large puff just at the elbow and with close-fitting lace cuff is one of the most eccentric models, but none the less is it a favorite one, for there can be so much trimming on it, and the general effect can so easily be changed. Long shoulder seams are still in fashion, but as the style is not becoming to everybody there have been many different methods introduced to give the same appearance, while in reality the seam itself is really quite short.

A deep cape or collar, a cap to the sleeve, that starts from the neck, or even a trimming that is put on the shoulder seam and then sees over onto the top of the sleeve.

A yoke or round collar, finished with a scant ruffle of lace that falls over the top of the sleeve, also gives the long seam.

But, of course, best of all is the coat or waist that can be made to start with the long seam and the sleeve started as far down as possible.

COTTON DUSTERS FOR THE HOUSE. Soft Material Is Much Used in Their

To keep a home in good order, plenty of dusters are a necessity. These should be neatly hemmed. They are best made some soft material. Old sheets make good dusters, and are particularly useful for dusting white and delicate articles. Cotton, however, is better than linen, which fluffy. Needless to say, dusters should be washed directly they are solled, and should never be allowed to get really dirty, or the furniture will look anything but bright and clean

Housemaids frequently flap the duster upon tables and chairs, and so raise the dust,

HOW TO WASH LACE. Process by Which Fabric May Be Cleaned Without Being Damaged.

By the process known as "bottle washing," the filmsiest laces may be thoroughly renovated without suffering the slightest damage. Indeed, in no other way known to "the craft" can the cleansing of these "spider-web fabrics" be effected, as the slightest rubbing is almost sure to displace the threads and give the piece a twisted, wrung appearance that is fatal forevermore. To "bottle wash" a piece of lace, select a smooth, round bottle, and wrap the fabric around it as tightly as possible without injury. This will prevent its winking at alin the washing. When it is smoothly and evenly rolled, baste it carefully here and there to keep it in place. Then wrap a piece of clean, white muslin about this, and baste it also quite firmly. Then the a stout string around the neck of the bottle to hang it by white tape or something of the sort, that cannot possibly soil or discolor the lace. Now let the whole go through the washing, boiling and rinsing waters, just as would any other material, squeezing it and working it carefully with the hands to prevent its becoming disarranged. Hang it on the line in the sun by the string on the bottle's neck and when quite dry remove the bastings and unwind the lace. This lat-ter will be found as smooth as if froned, and having the appearance of new lace. Several thicknesses of it may be wrapped on the bottle at once if care be taken to keep it perfectly smooth, and the lowest layers will come out as white and thorough-ly cleansed as those on the outside.

To those who revel in the multifor summer drink the recent statement of Doctor Wiley, chemist for the United States Department of Agriculture, that "iced tea is suicidal and the devil lurks in the soda fountain," comes like a bomb. He goes on to explain that the extrem cold contracts the pores and congests the coating of the stomach. But, despite this authority's ample dissertations on the evils of "refrigerating the stomach while thermometer stands well on to 100 in the shade," it is doubtful if the run on the shade," It is doubtful if the run on the fountains will be perceptibly decreased thereby. He urges that more fruits and cereals and less meat on the summer bill of fare would so reduce the natural temperature that moderately cold water would answer all requirements of the system, and by degrees of the now perverted appetite. "Mothers," he continues, "even permit their little children to drink glass after glass of tea or effervescent drinks, thick with broken ice, and then ascribe the resultant bad feelings to the heat. So-called summer drinks that are bottled and then kept on ice for hours and finally poured
